

midlinging took place, there isn't a paper in the world that didn't have something to say. Yet I can assure you of one thing, that which was published in the papers was not the truth. The name-calling in reference to Queen Juliana and myself was done purposely in order to get us angry so that one of us might talk. I knew the Queen wouldn't, and I didn't. Every time the press brought up the question, "What did the Queen have to say?", I would reply, "that is the Queen's honor to speak first." So, since reporters were not admitted to the interview, and by the way, this was held inside the Palace and not on the levee, for two hours instead of 45 minutes, and I wouldn't give them the answer when they questioned me, you can imagine the irritation that was going on, with guessing as to what might have been said and what the Queen's reaction might have been. That is all.

I did not quit lecturing on the grounds of what happened in Zurich, but on advice of a doctor in Basel who warned me that so much continuous talking over such a long period of time had caused my throat to become badly irritated, my lungs somewhat weakened, and with a cold which I contracted in Edinburgh I could easily get pneumonia. Then they would be shipping me home in a wooden box. After a careful examination he instructed me to take at least two months rest, which I am now doing.

FIRST FOLD

Finally, let me say, I have learned from this trip more than the people who listened to me. I have learned what little understanding there is in a world overflowing with knowledge. No,-- it is up to each individual, for as one makes a bed, so must he sleep in it. No one can fulfill that duty for another. So again let me thank you, whether you agree with me or not, for the privilege given me to learn from all of you so much more than I have ever known before.

With best wishes always to each and every one of you.

Sincerely,
