

Still, who is to say that a defense will not be needed? Since we are in the process of evolving, people of other planets throughout the cosmos are likewise evolving. Review the information given in Inside the Space Ships. We are not the lowest in the cosmos! Beyond our system are whole systems whose peoples have not progressed socially as far as we on Earth, yet some of these people have advanced beyond us scientifically and do have space ships. While we were confined to our own planet with the thought that space was an empty void, impossible of travel, we naturally were of little interest to most outsiders. But now that we are sending rockets and satellites into space we are attracting attention to ourselves and natural curiosity would cause them to investigate us. Since we of Earth are warlike, with a history of wars through the centuries, why would we not rightly suspect that people of lower evolution socially would not only be like us, but more so? Because they live on another planet and travel space as we are trying to do, certainly does not make angels of them! And while they might not try to attack the world as a whole at this time, our space ships just might need the protection that our militarily trained personnel could provide. Surely no one would expect our neighbors to provide escorts for each of our space craft! At the same time, having a knowledge of self-protection does not mean that our own space travelers and ships would have to go out belligerently to start war against anyone. The main purpose for men, ships and equipment would of course be primarily for research, study and exploration.

Another matter of utmost importance to those who profess to guide people in the field of space knowledge, according to the Brothers, is telepathy, since there are no telephone systems established between Earth and other planets. Their statement was supported by a column long article in the Los Angeles Examiner, a daily newspaper, on October 2, 1960. It was titled, "Telepathy in Space Studied", written by Julian Marty. A short quote: "The possibility of Federal financing of such a study came up recently with local engineers deeply involved in the problem of communication over vast distances of space . . ."

Various phases of the subject were discussed, according to this article, with emphasis on the urgency of telepathy for space travelers. The meeting described was attended by scientists, engineers and Federal representatives, all of whom indicated the importance of such a study for space communication. Yet we who have pioneered in this field during the last many years and should be capable of utilizing this avenue of communication, have done little with it. It is about time that we become more serious in our undertaking along this line and begin to use what we have been given, or we will be left behind. Telepathic understanding and communication are more than essential if progress is to be made.

This is another step that has been developed during the passing year toward relationship with space. So we may close the book of this year, with many thanks for the seeds that have been sown for next year's crop of progress.

Let me now wish you all the happiest holiday season you have ever had, as the fruits of our united efforts lie just ahead to be harvested. There is no turning back any more!

Sincerely,

George Adamski

PS: Parties involved in arranging the International Interplanetary Congress in Washington next year find themselves unable to carry through the plans. So this has been cancelled.

I have received word from my agent that my next book, Flying Saucers Farewell, has been accepted for publication by Abelard-Schuman, Ltd., publishers of IFSS. No date yet.
