

December 10, 1959

Dear Co-worker:

The time has come when the world again acknowledges the Prince of Peace and is about to enter another year. I only wish I could be with all of you during these days that we might celebrate together the accomplishments of this past year. As I see it, 1959 has been the most successful year of all since the visitors from out of space have been coming our way. I can say this with all sincerity, regardless what others might say. I can truthfully say also that the tour which I completed in June was 1,000% successful. Many things are beginning to come forth as a result.

The marvelous cooperation I received from all of you will never be forgotten. I just wish that such gatherings could be more often. For meetings of this kind bring better understanding between all concerned and naturally better results, proving that the labor is not in vain.

Because I have been visited by the Brothers on many occasions since I have been home, I can tell you that they are more than satisfied with the progress made through your excellent cooperation.

But the work has just begun. The coming year will see greater results from our efforts than ever before. 1959 brought forth many changes. 1960 will bring many more! We have learned much as a result of landing a rocket on the moon as well as from photographing the other side of our satellite. I would not be one bit surprised if we received holiday greetings from Earth's people on the moon yet this year. That is how fast things are moving. By the end of next year we will surely have people on the moon and possibly visiting other planets as their people are visiting ours. True, there will be sorrow through 1960, but also there will be much joy to brighten and encourage our way.

A chain of friendship has been welded between the peoples of Earth with each of you serving as a willing link. I dare say that no one has been able to accomplish all that he would have liked. Yet as we look back, we have all grown in understanding through the services we have rendered, and help received from the Brothers. The coming year will demand even closer cooperation among us all that we may better help our fellowman understand himself and thereby others. In this way alone will we realize the fulfilling of the long cherished desire of "peace on Earth, good will toward all men" of the Cosmos. Progress may appear slow and sometimes disheartening, but progress is being made, for which we can all give our heartfelt thanks.

This is my Christmas greeting to each of you.

In love and appreciation,

George Adamski
